What Did Indiana Make and Do?

1. Imagine visiting an Indiana farm in the 1820s. Families raised corn and hogs to sell or eat. These were goods, things people could take home. A farmer might carry a sack of corn to a nearby mill. There, a miller ground the corn into meal for the family. Grinding grain was a service, work done for someone else.

2. Jump ahead to the early 1900s. In South Bend, Indiana, Studebaker workers built cars. A finished car was a good that a family could buy and use. Cars also needed care. A mechanic in a repair shop could fix a broken engine for a driver. That repair was a service. A new kind of good brought a new need for skilled work.

3. Now visit Elkhart, Indiana, in the 2020s. Workers there build recreational vehicles, also called RVs. An RV is a good that travelers can drive and sleep in. When one needs repair, a mechanic can fix it for a customer. Repairing an RV is a service. The goods made in Indiana have changed over time, and workers still provide services that help people use them.
